G.W. READING CENTER ANNOUNCES SUMMER PROGRAMS

The George Washington University Reading Center is holding registration for its Summer 1988 program schedule from now until June 20. Children, students and adults can improve their reading, thinking and study skills through a variety of courses to be held during June and July.

Special programs for children include "Math Made Practical" and "A Unique Piagetian Experience for Developing Logical Thinking Skills" -- the goal of which is to develop overall thinking and reasoning abilities. Gifted children can benefit from courses on "Thinking Enrichment" and through special-interest classes such as "Mathematics on the Mall" and "A Glimpse Behind the Wall: China, Yesterday and Today."

Junior high, high school and advanced high school are the divisions of the Study Skills Program offered by the GW Reading Center. Students learn about time management, effective writing, listening, note taking, test taking and studying textbooks.

Other specialized courses include "Spelling and Composition for Horrendous Spellers," as well as "Intensive SAT Preparation." The Reading Center also offers an "Intensive College Preparatory Program" (I-PREP) which prepares prospective and current college students for advanced academic study.

Many of the classes offered by the Reading Center are open to adults as well. Diagnostic testing is used to determine the best way to handle each individual's needs.

All age groups can benefit from one-on-one tutoring sessions available through the Reading Center's Catch Up Program. Reading and writing classes are also offered for the hearing-impaired with instruction under the direction of professional reading specialists and educators of the deaf.

Students may register through the first day of class, on a first-come, first-served basis. For a complete listing, including course descriptions, schedules and costs, call (202) 994-6286 or write The George Washington University Reading Center, 2201 G Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20052.
